Frankfort 45 Piece Band Will Play At Colonial Village Sun.

The Frankfort School Band has had a very special and distinctive honor conferred on it by way of being sponsored by the Colonial Village at the World's Fair to play in that village and also in Merry England, The Lincoln Group and Fort Dearborn this Sunday afternoon.

The band of forty-five pieces will be in charge of Mr. A. Hill, principal of the Frankfort public school and will be directed by Robert D. Wight of Joliet. The band members will meet at the Frankfort public school grounds at 11 a. m. Sunday and go to Matteson and board two chartered coaches on the electric train leaving Matteson at 11:49 and which will take them to the World's Fair gates. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon they will play at the Colonial Village. After an hour's stay at that Village the band will march to the other villages named.

The band members will be provided with tickets at the fair.

Many Frankfort people are planning to attend the band concert at the fair and the Frankfort Band Boys are to be congratulated on this fine opportunity to play at the World's Fair which will be an experience the memory of which they will cherish the rest of their lives. Frankfort is justified in feeling proud of its young musicians.

Tinley Woman's Club Holds Its Opening Meeting

The opening meeting of the Tinley Park Woman's Club was held Wednesday afternoon October 24 in the Methodist church in Tinley Park, with forty members, friends and neighboring club visitors being present.

The newly decorated church, and the many baskets and vases of flowers and lovely colored fall leaves, gave a pleasing setting for the occasion.

Mrs. Milton Cruse, Third District president, who was to have been an honored guest, due to previous engagements, was unable to be present. Mrs. Wallace B. Combs, State Garden chairman, and organizer of this club, was the only honored guest. After the president, Mrs. Chas. Nielsen, called the meeting to order, Mrs. Combs addressed the ladies present, complimenting them on the work which they have done and the spirit which they are showing in the Women's Federation work.

Visiting presidents were called upon for a few words of greeting, they being, Mrs. Geo. Word of Palos Park, Mrs. Schmidt from Homewood and Mrs. Frank Kohlhaugen from Frankfort.

A musical program, in charge of the music chairman, Mrs. Leah Winsor, presented the following numbers: Little Delores Neibergall, six years old, from Tinley Park, sang, "The Bee and the Butterfly" and "The Little Fat Goblin"; The Tinley Park Woman's club trio, composed of Mrs. R. Freitag, Mrs. Winsor and Mrs. Harry Mager sang two selections, "When You Come to the End of A Perfect Day" and "The Rosary". They were well received, and Mrs. Mildred Nelson, accompanied by Mrs. Mae Adams, both of Forest Ridge, sang "Trees" and "In a Luxemburg Garden", which were greatly enjoyed. Mrs. Nelson is a very sweet singer with great expression.

At the close of the musical program all journeyed to the parlors of the church where, Mrs. Elmer Chapman, as hostess, presided at a tea. The center of the room was occupied by a long table, covered with a lace cloth with a low bowl of pink cosmos in the center and with a tall pink candle on either side. Mrs. Nielsen and Mrs. Combs poured, and all enjoyed the tea and the dainty wafers with it.

After a pleasant social hour, the members again assembled in the church auditorium where a business meeting was conducted, with Mrs. Nielsen presiding.

Mrs. Winsor, music chairman, announced the formation of a woman's chorus, which is to meet each Wednesday evening in the various member's homes. The first meeting, however, will be next Thursday evening, in the home of Mrs. Fred Goebel at 7:30 o'clock. All members interested in music are invited.

Mrs. Cora Hoffman, chairman of the American Home department announced the formation of a club for her department. They will meet each third Friday afternoon at 2:00 o'clock. The first meeting was held last Friday afternoon in Mrs. Hoffman's home, with fourteen ladies

Sen. R. J. Barr Not To Blame For Wolf Road Paving Delay

The Wolf Road at Mokena which has been kicked around as a political football for the past five years, is again much in evidence in the present political campaign. Some people in the Mokena and Frankfort territory are trying to blame Senator Richard J. Barr because the highway has not been completed to the Lincoln Highway.

In all fairness to the Senator, this wrong idea must be corrected. It was thru the good offices of the Senator that action on the paving of Wolf Road from the Cook and Will County line to the Hickory Creek bridge south of Mokena, was brought about in 1930.

When C. M. Cleveland began to block the building of the highway thru his farm on the straight line, the matter went out of the hands of Senator Barr and became a matter for court condemnation proceedings which phase was entirely out of the Senator's jurisdiction.

The Senator should be given credit for what he has done for the construction of Wolf road and should not be blamed for the holding up of the connection with the Lincoln Highway. The delay of completing the Wolf Road connection with the Lincoln Highway, is entirely the work of obstructionists who are opposed to the straight line routing.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

Washington.—President Roosevelt believes that commodity prices should go somewhat higher, but he has advised administration leaders to be on guard against a runaway movement.

In making known his view, the President likewise for the first time tossed overboard the plans of many theorists for stabilization of prices on the basis of the 1926 price range and adopted instead something approximating the average of quotations existing in the period between 1909 and 1914.

Although Mr. Roosevelt never has publicly espoused the 1926 price level as such, his discussions have given rise to a general belief that the parity existing around that time constituted a relationship between farm products and industrial products which was satisfactory to him. Therefore, when he said the other day that he preferred the 1909-14 level, he turned his face from the position occupied by numerous groups, such as the committee for the nation and several farm organizations that have contended the 1926 relationship between farm and industrial prices should be the goal.

Most Washington observers agree that the administration is alert to the dangers of runaway prices, resulting not so much from the unbalanced condition of the budget and paper inflation as from uncontrolled and unguided credit expansion. In other words, it is believed the President recognizes threats of a dangerous boom which, if it occurred, and was followed by the inevitable collapse, would leave our country in the throes of another depression.

In a conference with the President a few days ago, Mr. Roosevelt gave newspaper correspondents every indication of a conviction that price questions involve many factors that are at the particular moment quite impossible of ascertainment. He showed, too, in the opinion of many of the writers, that he is not following advice of the theorists without giving some practical consideration to the doctrines they advance. For example, the President's position clearly shows a desire to find ways and means of preventing wide fluctuations in commodity prices such as those that have characterized quotations in periods like 1920 to 1930. How far he will get in working out such a system is, of course, entirely problematical, but his comprehension of the problem has been accepted by the conservative element with more enthusiasm than they have given heretofore to his pronouncements.

Mr. Roosevelt believes that the nation is solvent. He contends that the column of assets has risen, through increases in general prices, to the point where it exceeds the column of liabilities or debts by a small margin. Arrival of this condition, therefore, has prompted him to give thought to the question of putting on brakes for rising prices. It is my understanding that the brakes are not to be applied yet. He intends, however, to keep them ready for use in case the runaway boom appears.

None of the administration spokesmen are willing at this time to disclose statistics which will represent the price level that is satisfactory to them. It is said, nevertheless, to be a percentage somewhat higher than now obtains.

The commodity price index of the bureau of labor statistics shows farm products now at 72.8, which research discloses is not far below the period from 1909 to 1914. The low point of this index figure for 1934 was 57.4, and the low point of the depression in March, 1933, was 42.8. Of course, index figures do not breathe life, but when two sets of them are arranged alongside each other, they become at least a basis of comparison, and after all, comparison is the best basis for judgment.

In some quarters of Washington I hear expressions to the effect that Mr. Roosevelt's latest move regarding prices indicates a conviction that restoration of the country's solvency is more important in the general recovery program than a good many of the theoretical and untried remedies brought into use in the last fifteen months. His price proposals obviously have not ended conjecture as to possible new moves. The program being in generalities did not cause fears to subside concerning future tampering with the monetary structure nor did it alleviate conditions born of the pressure on commerce and industry resulting from NRA and its hundreds of codes.

Taken as a whole, the Washington picture at present is viewed by many astute observers as an indication that Mr. Roosevelt is trying to get together with those who would release credit if given reasonable assurances as to future plans of the administration. It must be said that Mr. Roosevelt has not been coaxing business leaders into the White House. It can be said with equal force, however, that he is being kept informed fully as to what these business leaders think. That being true, it seems to be a proper prediction that the administration is searching quietly for ways of compromise and is hoping at least that there can be proposals in the next congress which will have the support of a considerable segment of business, a segment that is decidedly not pulling with the administration now because it doubts the efficacy of the brain trust proposals.

NRA Faces Bitter Fight

The guiding hands of NRA have run into a tough adversary right here in the National Capital in a firm by the name of W. F. Roberts company, incorporated. The Roberts company declined to sign the graphic arts code, the code that applies to printing and allied industries. Having refused to sign the code the Roberts company paid no attention to the code provisions governing wages and hours of labor, so NRA turned the case over to its lawyers for prosecution, and that was the beginning of a fight that promises to be as bitter as any yet arising from New Deal legislation.

The NRA lawyers, armed with affidavits of eight Roberts' employees to the effect that they were not receiving minimum code wages and were working more than the maximum hours, sought in an injunction in the District of Columbia courts to prevent the corporation from violating the code further. Their contention was that the code applied to the Roberts company despite its refusal to sign because it was drafted with the assent of a majority of the printing industry. But the court declined to grant the injunction, deciding that the case should be tried on its merits. The Roberts company felt it had gained something of a victory in the court's ruling, but it did not stop there. It has laid out a much broader campaign and it is that campaign which is proving so embarrassing to the NRA.

B. H. Roberts, head of the corporation, told me in the course of a discussion of the case that he was determined to awaken the country to the excessive costs of code maintenance. He objects strenuously to some of the code provisions and maintains that the bulk of his pay roll is well above the minimum prescribed by the code, but that his main complaint is against the arbitrary actions of the code authorities set up by NRA for enforcement of the code provisions.

The Roberts company further contends that the code authorities are impractical, that they lack an understanding of the businesses over which they preside and that their whole course of action tends to put legitimate industries in a strait-jacket which, according to Mr. Roberts, can have only one result, namely, loss of profits and eventual dismissal of some if not many employees.

The reports in Washington are to the effect that since the Roberts company case reached the trial court, something like 1,800 print shops throughout the country have declined to pay further assessments to the code authority for their industry. There is no means at present available for ascertaining this figure accurately, but the gossip around NRA is to the effect that not only have scores of print shops refused to pay assessments, but in a vast number of cases they have surrendered their blue eagle to NRA headquarters. This means virtually an open revolt in that part of the printing industry, and it is a circumstance that is causing considerable worry among NRA administrators.

Nearing Open Break

This weekly resume of Washington affairs is not intended to be of a gossipy character, but there is a report going around in Washington, quite unconfirmed as yet, that holds much significance. For that reason I shall include it that you may know all things are not serene.

The story concerns a rift in the Department of Agriculture and its adopted child, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration. In no governmental agency are there as many brain trusters and theorists as are to be found in the AAA. They have come to be known as the Tugwellians, named for Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell, undersecretary of agriculture. Professor Tugwell, long regarded as the outstanding brain truster, has been consistent in promotion of his theories and his sub-brain trusters have followed his lead through all the storm and strife between the theoretical and the practical men within the administration.

Now, according to the report, the rift between the brain trusters and the practical men in the AAA and the department as well is approaching an open break. It has gone so far, according to well authenticated reports, that the practical groups have prepared their resignations and have left them in the hands of one individual to present when and if he believes that course becomes necessary. I am not informed whether the Tugwellian group is prepared to take the same action in event of an explosion, but past performances would indicate that they will stick on the job and fight.

It is difficult to predict at this time what the outcome may be, but one thing is certain. There are going to be changes in the AAA and in the Department of Agriculture, and when those changes come it necessarily will be prelude to revision of policies.

Lesson for October 28

THE CHRISTIAN'S STANDARD OF LIFE

LESSON TEXT—Ephesians 4:17-5:21. GOLDEN TEXT—And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit, Ephesians 5:18. PRIMARY TOPIC—Growing Like Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Learning to Rule Ourselves. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Evils to Be Avoided. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Evils to Be Overcome.

In order effectively to teach this lesson, the book of Ephesians as a whole must be apprehended. The first three chapters are devoted to the setting forth of the high calling of the believer in Christ. The last three chapters set forth the worthy walk of the believer, in the light of the high calling.

I. The Believer Does Not Walk as the Heathen Do (4:17-19). The believer is a partaker of the new humanity in Christ. Being such, he is no longer to follow after the "old man." It should be observed that the believer in Christ is in conflict with his broken human nature called the "old man." In order to see the walk of the believer in contrast with that of the world, we should see what the walk of the heathen involved.

1. The mind (v. 17). The unregenerate have no clear or settled principle or sound theory of life. No man of a sound mind will worship idols, or practice vices which are odious and ruinous.

2. The spiritual nature (v. 18). Paul says they were "alienated from the life of God." They were indeed ignorant of God.

3. Their moral nature (v. 19). Paul says they were "past feeling." Because of this, they could neither love God nor hate sin, therefore gave themselves over to shameless profligacy.

II. The Believer's Walk as Taught by Christ (4:20-24).

Christ is the pattern of holiness and unselfishness for the believer.

a. The "old man" is to be put off (v. 22). The habits and deeds of the old nature, which are grossly corrupt, are to be put away.

b. The "new man" is to be put on (vv. 23, 24). The "new man" lives a life of righteousness and holiness—the unmistakable signs of a new nature.

III. The Vices Which the New Man Discards (4:25-5:6).

1. Falsehood (v. 25). The renewed man puts off lying. He tells the truth instead. Soundness of faith makes an honest tongue.

2. Anger (vv. 26, 27). By anger is meant not burning indignation against sin, but personal bitterness, which means giving place to the devil.

3. Theft (v. 28). The new man will not steal. He will render honest toil instead. It should be borne in mind that there are other ways of stealing than rifling a cash drawer or seizing another's pocketbook. Taking what does not belong to you, not making proper change in a business transaction, riding on a car and not paying your fare, are stealing.

4. Idle and corrupt speech (vv. 29, 30). Pure conversation is the sure sign of regeneration. Corrupt speech grieves the Holy Spirit.

5. Malice (4:31-5:2). This means badness of disposition expressing itself in bitterness, clamor, and railing. This is to be supplanted with kindness and tender-heartedness.

6. Impurity (vv. 3, 4). Uncleanliness of life is peculiarly common among the heathen.

7. Covetousness or greed (v. 5). Whenever business is allowed to crowd out our spiritual interests we are brought under the control of the flesh or the "old man."

IV. The Walk of the Believer as Filled With the Spirit (5:15-21).

1. His life in relation to the world about him (vv. 15-18).

a. Circumspectly (v. 15). This means to walk with one's eyes open. Every step is to be thoughtfully and prayerfully taken.

b. Diligent to seize every opportunity (v. 16). It means watching the time, that is, bringing it under personal control.

c. He abstains from the intoxicating cup (v. 18). The believer is a total abstainer. This obligation is incumbent upon him today as perhaps in no other day.

2. The inner life or personal state of the believer (vv. 18-21). The one who is filled with the Spirit has an exhilaration from within which expresses itself

a. In supreme joyousness. b. In thanking God at all times for all things (v. 20). c. In lowliness of mind (v. 21).

Life's Problems

The problems of life are not solved mainly by those who sit idly under the trees mooning over the ills of existence—they are solved mainly by those who eat and sleep, look up at the stars and down at the flowers, trust in God and in the goodness of their fellows, and steadily accomplish their appointed tasks.

Not That Way

We do not often draw people close to us by telling them what is wrong with them.

ILLINOIS State News

Frey Snyder, fifty-three, lifelong resident of McLean, fell to his death when a scaffold collapsed on which he and two other men were working.

Joseph Wasielewski, forty-nine years old, an employee of the Johns-Manville company who resided in Waukegan, was fatally burned in his room after falling asleep while smoking a cigarette.

A drive which will result in the confiscation of all unstamped liquor in Illinois has been started by the state department of finance following reports by liquor revenue investigators that there is still a large amount of such stock in the possession of retail dealers.

Illinois counties have allotted $626,014.90 from the motor fuel tax paid into the state treasury during September, it was announced by K. L. Ames, Jr., director of finance. Of the total allotment, $137,500 is held in reserve for interest and retirement of the $20,000,000 emergency relief bond issue by 40 counties of the state, which took advantage of this aid. Cook county pays $126,991.70 toward the bond reserve from its September allotment of $292,700.56.

The number of resident families in Illinois receiving relief from public funds during September decreased 1.1 per cent, it was announced by Wilfred S. Reynolds, executive secretary of the Illinois Emergency Relief commission. Due to close case work control and a decline in the number of families in need of drouth relief, he said, the total number of families receiving aid dropped to 279,368 during September as compared with an anticipated case load of 285,000 and an actual August relief load of 282,508.

Don Whaley, twenty-four, a farmer near Lewiston, killed himself, after shooting Mrs. Gwelda Anderson, thirty, of Galesburg. She is in a critical condition at the home of friends in Cuba, seven miles north. Whaley had met Mrs. Anderson before her marriage. He tried to make a date with her while she was at supper with friends. She refused. Whaley went home for a .22 rifle and, returning, fired through the glass part of a door, hitting Mrs. Anderson in the right breast. Whaley's body was found near a bridge about four miles south of the house where he had shot Mrs. Anderson.

Signs of increased interest in agriculture are seen in the fact that the total enrollment of 893 students in the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois, is the largest since the fall of 1921, it was announced by R. R. Hudelson, assistant dean. The total enrollment this fall represents a gain of 173 students over last year. The increase in the agricultural college enrollment this year is a gain of 2 per cent over last year, Dean Hudelson reported. There is a 24 per cent gain in agricultural students alone and a 24.1 per cent gain in home economics students.

After several weeks of delay the processing and canning of cattle from drouth areas for relief purposes was begun when thirteen carloads of animals were received by four packing companies which were awarded contracts by the Illinois Emergency Relief commission on September 14. The cattle and calves purchased in the West by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration were shipped from Kansas City and St. Louis. Five carloads went to the Rich Packing company, Rockford, recipient of the largest contract. The remainder of the first shipment was divided among the Ottawa Packing company, Deatur, and the Empire Packing company, Chicago.

Ralph Carahan, twenty-seven, and Virgil Soughters, twenty-four, both of Paris, were killed when struck by Big Four train while sitting on the track.

After lying for two days and nights under his automobile at the bottom of a 15-foot embankment, Dr. John C. Furlong, seventy-one years old, prominent McHenry county physician, died of injuries and shock in the Mercy hospital at Janesville, Wis. Doctor Furlong, who lived at Spring Grove, had practiced medicine for 23 years in McHenry county, where he was a former president of the County Medical association.

Seeing that the driver was not taking it too well, he added:

"No," agreed the driver, rolling up his sleeves, "but what makes you think you're a stone?"—Province (Vancouver).

Maple Long Preferred by Furniture Craftsmen

"Through the centuries furniture craftsmen have appreciated maple and their loving hands have wrought such miracles of beautiful maple furniture that their historic consequence dwells with us today in our homes, where they enjoy enduring welcome," says the Educational Institute of the Furniture World.

"Particularly in the original American colonies, settled by our Pilgrim and Puritan forefathers, was this wood specially favored. Here in this humble beginning maple played a large part in the origin of the great colonial period in furniture design. During the Seventeenth century the Swedish influence in maple furniture design began to make itself felt.

"With crude tools, but great genius, skillful hands carved out of maple great furniture masterpieces that are today priceless treasures. Their splendid rugged character, fine and simple design, serve to emphasize the cheerful warmth of this historic wood.

"Present day designers hold maple in high reverence and respect the traditions of its background. And factories, too, busily engaged in the mass reproduction of maple furniture pieces, are faithful to the centuries-old legend of maple."

The Voice of the American Legion

By The Tinley Park Post No. 615

STATE COMMANDER
Paul (Army) Armstrong
Gives The Drama Behind
Rehabilitation Program

The dramatic story of a seaman's sacrifice and rescue of the ship's commander at sea was told by Commander Armstrong Sept. 25, at the installation of Harwood post, Joliet. "Army" learned this story of heroism while investigating the death of the service man at North Chicago hospital and found this hero of the sea, Ed Griffin, is still suffering from his experiences.

Griffin saved himself from a torpedoed cruiser and floating found his commander, a short swimmer, about to sink. Griffin took off his life jacket and put it around the officer. Seventy-two hours they floated before being picked up. He still is in a hospital.

Praising Past Commander Kapuschull and Robt. Kinnare, judge advocate, for their careful investigation of the death, Paul stated that these are the men The Legion and the veterans must not forget.

The frightful conditions and the brutality of hospital conditions under the contract system and exposed under Wm. McCauley, when department commander, were recited by Armstrong. Men were chained to posts, heroes, wounded and disabled in the world war, given dungeon treatment. The government gave $2.50 a day for their subsistence and hospitalization and the investigations barred that contractors spent less than 50c a day on them.

These investigations brought the great veterans bureau hospitals such as Hines, "Army" declared, adding, all too little is known of these fights for the simplest of justice to our disabled. Never must we relax vigilance, never lose strength, but increase our power with members.

"Every post should strengthen its community service and strive to let the citizens generally know of our true aspirations, not what our enemies have wanted them to believe," "Army" charges, "bring your community civic, business and industrial leaders to at least one meeting a year and get members now before the cold weather and winter responsibilities come."

The state commander expressed himself as pleased with the large attendance of the V. F. W. and United Spanish War veterans and declared this stopped the attempts of those who wished to divide the organized veterans as a means of defeating the program for the disabled and that they belonged together in common effort for the disabled, the community and nation.

THE LEGION SPEAKS ON WAR AND NATIONAL DEFENSE
The AMERICAN LEGION views with deep concern the growth of opinion as voiced in the press, current magazines and interviews of the likelihood of an impending war.

The Legion is also aware of an increased and intense public interest in the profits and the alleged intrigues of munition manufacturers in fomenting war, as evidenced in recent publications culminating in the present Congressional investigation. The American Legion is best equipped of all organizations in the nation to discourage the opinion that war is inevitable. And it is best equipped to point out to American youth that war is not a romantic adventure, but rather a horrible tragedy.

The Legion reaffirms its position in favor of an adequate national defense. It reaffirms as well its belief in individual duty to bear arms in time of war.

The Legion pledges its utmost support to combat this growing belief that war is inevitable.

The Legion now reaffirms its demand of many years for the enactment of the Universal Draft Law, which in the event of war would conscript all of the resources of the nation without profit to anyone. The Legion again appeals to the public and particularly to the youth of America for public support for this measure, believing that a real devotion to a frank and friendly understanding between the nations, an adequate preparedness plus the Universal Draft Law, taking profit out of war, would furnish the surest guarantee of a lasting peace for the American nation.

From Tom Hayden, Kentucky's veteran Department Adjutant, comes the story of a doctor noted for his laconic speech who met his equal in a woman of few words. She came to him with a hand badly inflamed. "Burn?" asked the doctor. "Bruise," the lady replied. "Poultice," directed the doctor. The next day the patient returned and the conversation was resumed. "Better?" inquired the doctor. "Worse." "More poultice." Two days later the woman called again. "Better?" "Well, Bill?" "Nothing," said the doctor. "Most sensible woman I ever met!"

HEADING FOR DICTATORSHIP SAYS REED

That the national administration is planning a dictatorship for the United States before the termination of the next session of congress is the charge made by States Attorney Chauncey W. Reed of DuPage County, candidate for congress on the Republican ticket for the eleventh district, which comprises the counties of DuPage, Will, Kane and McHenry.

His charge is based upon a declaration of no less an authority than United States Senator James Hamilton Lewis, recognized as spokesman for the national administration. That declaration of Senator Lewis was made at a gathering of Democrats at Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 16th, the meeting having been arranged for the purpose of coordinating democratic campaign issues. That fact, Mr. Reed points out, emphasizes the determination of the Democratic elements to centralize power to such an extent that an actual and not a merely nominal dictatorship, such as Mr. Reed says now exists, can be forced upon this nation during the next few months.

Mr. Reed's startling charge is based upon a press association dispatch quoting Senator Lewis' prophetic remarks. That dispatch stated that "the (Senator Lewis) sees an 'end of the sovereignty of states' close at hand" and "the establishment of one 'state of the union'." This situation the senator predicted, the dispatch continues, "will result from refusal of states and political subdivisions to pay back to the federal government money which it has advanced in the furtherance of relief. An impression that the federal government will not demand return of this money, he declared 'is erroneous.'"

To force the collection of those advanced funds, he said local governments will be abolished and the federal government will impose and collect all taxes, retaining for itself the amount of the advances.

Present state rights, according to the administration mouthpiece, are to be abolished. One "State of the Union", such as exists in fascist Italy, in Nazi Germany, in Soviet Russia, is to be established. Right of state and local government taxation is to be abolished. That of course, is to be followed by elimination of the right to state legislation and county or local regulation of internal affairs. Central bureaucratic heads, dominated by a dictatorial authority, will rule the affairs of townships, villages, individuals, as well as of state and county and city organizations. State lines will be eliminated. There will be no Illinois, no Indiana, no state of any name, but only "one state of the Union" dominated, levied upon for direct taxation, whipped into submission by a centralized dictatorial power.

Vote for BARR On His Known RECORD of SERVICE

Richard J. Barr has proved his ability to GET THINGS DONE for the 41st District and for the State as a whole. He pushed to passage a bill to grade and segregate offenders in our State penal and reformatory institutions which will mean much in rescuing first offenders and bring about a substantial saving to the State. He was also largely responsible for the hundreds of miles of paved roads in Will and DuPage counties WITHOUT direct tax; for the Workmen's Compensation Act; the Farmer's Cattle Indemnity Act; for the Lakes-to-Gulf Canal, and for scores of other VALUABLE pieces of legislation. He also obtained track elevation, the Union Station, the segregated system of wells, and established Joliet's street cleaning department.

THIS DISTRICT NEEDS BARR'S LEADERSHIP AT SPRINGFIELD! Vote the straight Republican Ticket and restore CONFIDENCE in our American Government. A Republican VICTORY will do more than anything else to BRING BACK JOBS.

NEW DEAL NOTES

A comparison of the tremendous sums which were spent for war and the relative insignificance of the present expenditures for industrial recovery, was set forth in an editorial in Colliers magazine on October 13th.

"The Banker's Trust Company," said the editorial in Colliers, "reckons our part of the world war cost at $9 billion 500 million dollars. . . . Compared with the fantastic figures of war, our present rate of expenditure for relief and recovery is modest.

Altogether the net increase in debt to be redeemed by future taxes is, at this writing, not large."

Secretary Morgenthau thinks the increase will certainly not be 8 billions, perhaps much less.

As the editorial in Colliers so clearly points out, we could and did expend nearly 40 billion dollars in a war to kill people, yet our total expenses for feeding and clothing these same citizens; saving their lives instead of killing them, will not cost us one-fifth that much.

The schools of Illinois shall not want during the administration of Governor Henry Horner. In September alone, a total of $1,814,022.35 was credited to the State distributive school fund by diversion of motor fuel receipts and proceeds from the retailers' occupational as authorized in a law sponsored by Governor Horner to help the schools and make possible further reduction in the school taxes of communities.

COL. KNOX WILL SPEAK AT G. O. P. RALLY IN AURORA

Col. Frank Knox, republican leader and editor and publisher of the Chicago Daily News, has accepted an invitation to appear in Aurora as the principal speaker at a public mass meeting which will be staged in connection with the eleventh congressional district convention of the Young Republican club, which will be held in Aurora Saturday.

Colonel Knox who has declined an invitation to address the Indiana state republican convention in order to speak at Aurora, is one of four men of national prominence who had been considered as convention speaker. The other three were Sen. William E. Borah of Idaho; Col. Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., who is scheduled to address a meeting at Rockford, Ill., within a few days of the convention at Aurora and who is the son of the late President Theodore Roosevelt whose birthday next Saturday will be celebrated as navy day, and Phil Hana, a former resident of Aurora and now editor of the Chicago Journal of Commerce.

The negotiations for Colonel Knox's appearance here were made thru the office of Justus L. Johnson of Aurora, chairman of the Illinois state republican committee and Sam Dean, Jr., of Elmhurst, district chairman of the Young Republican Club.

It is expected that Colonel Knox's address, which will be made at the Island avenue armory Saturday night, will be broadcast over the radio, probably over the Chicago Daily News station WMAQ.

The Young Republican Club of Aurora which is acting as host to the convention, has sent out 1,000 invitations to members of the organization thruout Kane, Will, DuPage and McHenry counties. An invitation has also been sent to Henry P. Fletcher, chairman of the republican national committee, but it has not yet been learned if he will be able to attend.

The convention proper, which will be preceded by registration in the republican headquarters in Island avenue armory at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. The armory auditorium will be divided into sections which will be occupied by the delegates from the various districts. The afternoon meeting will be addressed by Chauncey W. Reed, of West Chicago, state's attorney of DuPage County and republican candidate for representative in congress from the eleventh district.

The convention session will be followed by a banquet which, according to present tentative plans, will be held at Hotel Aurora.

C. Wayland Brooks, of Chicago, republican candidate for representative in congress from the state at large, will address either the afternoon session of the convention, the banquet or the mass meeting in the evening with the possibility that he may speak at two or all three gatherings. One of his speeches may also be broadcast.

Entertainment features will also be included in the banquet program.

The mass meeting will open at the Island avenue armory at 8 o'clock in the evening at which time Colonel Knox will be presented for an address. Republican candidates for county offices will probably be introduced but they will not speak.

One of the features of the mass meeting will be the presentation of six gavel made from the wood of the old Congregational church in which the Republican party was organized in Aurora and which was only recently torn down. According to present plans, one of these gavel will be presented to Fletcher, another to Johnson and a third to Attorney Charles A. O'Connor of Aurora, chairman of the Kane County republican central committee. The recipients of the other three gavel has not yet been selected.

The mass meeting will be open to the general public, is expected to attract a crowd of at least 5,000. As the building accommodates only 2,500 the north stub end of Island avenue, north of Main street will be roped off and closed to traffic in order to accommodate the overflow. A loud speaker system will be installed in order that the program may be heard by those who are forced to remain outside.

Plans are also being made for an old fashioned torch light parade which will be held in the evening, either immediately preceding or following the mass meeting.

The Young Republican club of Aurora which is acting as host to the convention, is headed by William J. Smith, Jr., of Aurora, as president, Lambert Ochenschlager, also of Aurora, is chairman of the county organization.

The Aurora club is also completing plans for a Halloween hop to be held at the Log Cabin Tuesday night, October 30th.

Corn-Hog Signers Donate 75 Pigs To Relief Agency

Seventy-five hogs, ranging in weight from 50 to 75 pounds, have been donated to the Will County Emergency Relief Commission by farmers in this county who are co-operating in the AAA corn-hog program, Farm Adviser L. W. Braham states.

The hogs are those which contract signers produced in excess of their hog quotas and which could not be marketed or butchered by the producers without violation of the terms of their contract with the government. By presenting the hogs to the relief agency, the producers evaded a penalty of $20 a head for each hog produced for market above the number permitted in the contract.

The hogs were accepted by Mr. Harwood, as representative of the county and state emergency relief commissions. The hogs will be slaughtered and the fresh meat given to families on relief in this county.

Donating their excess hogs to the relief agency was one of several options open to corn-hog signers and was the choice of most of the AAA producers who found that the number of pigs farrowed on their farms this year was greater than the number permitted for market and home consumption. By disposing of the extra hogs in this manner, the animals do not enter the competitive markets where they might tend to lower prices received for other hogs produced this year, but are consumed by families who might otherwise not be able to obtain their meat needs this winter.

Important Waterway

The Suez canal, opened in 1869, has a length of 101 miles, and a minimum width of 147 feet, 8 inches. The maximum draught of water allowed for vessels using the canal is 32 feet. The average time for transit through the canal is 15 hours 20 minutes. The canal is owned by a company, and Great Britain holds a controlling interest in the company.

His Accidental End

There are all sorts of ways of putting things, and some sound much better than others. For example, there is the case of the man of whom Lord Coleridge used to tell, whose father was hanged for highway robbery. Some one asked him how his father died. "Sir," said he "he fell from a scaffolding outside Newgate while he was talking to a clergyman."—Youth's Companion.

Corn Concoctions

UNUSUAL concoctions can nowadays be made with even so usual a vegetable as ever popular corn. Here are a couple.

Escalloped Corn, Celery and Olives: Boil one cup diced celery five minutes, and drain. Put alternate layers of the contents of a 10½-ounce can whole kernel corn, the celery and one-fourth cup chopped ripe olives in a baking dish, sprinkling with three-fourths teaspoon salt and a few grains of pepper. Dot top with two tablespoons butter, pour over two-thirds cup milk, and cover with half a cup buttered crumbs. Bake for about forty-five minutes in a 375 degree oven, or until the celery is tender. Serves six.

Vegetable Casserole: Cook two tablespoons chopped onion in four tablespoons butter until pale yellow. Add the contents of an 11-ounce can corn, four medium tomatoes cut in small pieces, and one summer squash (weighing about one pound), peeled and also cut small. Season with salt and pepper and pour into a baking dish. Cover and bake for about forty-five minutes in a 375 degree oven. Serves eight.

A Cheap Corn Dish
If you want a tasty dish that it costs less than thirty-five cents to serve to four people, try this

Deviled Corn Scallops: Mix together two cups canned corn and the contents of a 2½-ounce can deviled ham, and season to taste with salt and pepper. Pour half into a buttered baking dish, sprinkle with a few crumbs, add rest of corn, and pour in one-third cup milk. Cover with the rest or half a cup crumbs to which two tablespoons melted

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

A GREAT COMMOTION

A GREAT commotion had broken out in the Old Orchard. Instantly Skimmer the Swallow flew over to see what it was all about and Peter Rabbit followed, lipperty lipperty-lip, as fast as his legs could take him. He was just in time to see Chatterer the Red Squirrel dodging around the trunk of a tree, first on one side, then on the other, to avoid the sharp bills of the angry feathered folk who had discovered him trying to rob a nest of its young.

It Was Their Nest.

Peter chuckled. "Chatterer is getting just what is due him," he muttered. "It reminds me of a time I got into a Yellow Jacket's nest. My, but those birds are mad!"

Chatterer continued to dodge from side to side of the tree while the birds darted down at him, all screaming at the top of their voices. Finally Chatterer saw his chance to run for the old stone wall. Only one bird was quick enough to catch up with him, and that one was such a tiny fellow that he seemed hardly bigger than a big insect. It was Hummer, the Hummingbird.

Hummer followed Chatterer clear to the old stone wall. A moment later Peter heard a humming noise just over his head and looked up to see Hummer alight on a twig, where he squeaked excitedly for a few minutes, for his voice is nothing but a little squeak. Often Peter had seen Hummer darting from flower to flower and holding himself still in mid air as he thrust his long bill into the heart of a flower to get the tiny insects there and the sweet juices he is so fond of. But this was the first time Peter had ever seen him sitting still. He was such a mite of a thing that it was hard to realize he was a bird. His back was a bright shining green. His wings and tail were brownish with a purplish tinge. Underneath he was whitish. But it was his throat on which Peter fixed his eyes. It was a wonderful ruby red which glistened and shone in the sun like a jewel.

Hummer lifted one wing and with his long needle-like bill smoothed the feathers under it. Then he darted out into the air, his wings moving so fast that Peter couldn't see them at all. But if he couldn't see them he could hear them. You see, they moved so fast that they made a sound very like the humming of Bumble the Bee. It is because of this that he is called the Hummingbird.

In a few minutes he was back again and almost at once was joined by Mrs. Hummer. She was dressed very much like him but did not have the beautiful ruby throat. She stopped only a minute or two and then darted over to what looked for all the world like a tiny cup of moss. It was their nest.

QUESTION BOX
By ED WYNN...
The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I just received a letter from my nephew, who lives in England. He writes me that his wife is suffering with "water on the brain." Can you tell me what that means?

Sincerely,
U. TELMEE.

Answer: When a woman has "water on the brain" it simply means she has a notion (an ocean) in her head.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I live in a boarding house. I pay $20 a week but the food they serve is not fit for a pig to eat. What shall I do?

Truly yours,
I. BETTY KNOWS.

Answer: If the food is really not fit for a pig, just sleep there and get your meals some other place.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

My birthday was January 4. My girl sent me a pair of gloves for a present but they are too large for me. What shall I do?

Truly yours,
A. B. SEEDEE.

Answer: Just pour about a half ounce of Scotch whisky on them. If it's the kind of Scotch they're selling now, a half ounce will make them tight.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

My wife returns home next Saturday from the hospital bringing with her our triplets just five weeks old. I am surprising my wife, as I have just had a nursery fitted out for our new babies. It is a beautiful room and I would like to have a suitable name painted on the door instead of "Nursery." What do you suggest?

Yours truly,
POP. PAH.

Answer: Three babies, five weeks old, in one room? If I were you I would call it the "Bawl-room."

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I got a job last Monday in a department store in the shoe department. At the end of the first week I was discharged. Can you tell me why? I swear to you I didn't do anything.

Sincerely,
I. STAUL.

Answer: That's why you were discharged.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I just moved into a new neighborhood. This morning I passed one of my new neighbors and bowed to her, but she did not return the bow. What would you do in a case like that?

Yours truly,
SHEEZA KATT.

Answer: That should be a warning to you. She may be the kind of a neighbor who never returns anything.

THE bride of today with all her equipment in culinary knowledge has no fear of failures in cookery. Up-to-date cook books with clear directions for preparing even the simple foods gives assurance to the most inexperienced.

Here is one which any bride will like to try:

Fancy Biscuit.

Take two cups of flour, four teaspoons of baking powder, one-half teaspoon of salt, one tablespoon of sugar, two tablespoons of shortening, one egg and two-thirds of a cup of milk, one-third cup of sliced dates, four tablespoons of peanut butter and one egg yolk. Sift the dry ingredients, work in the shortening with a fork until well blended, add milk and well beaten egg to form a soft dough. Roll out on a floured board and cut small rounds. Spread one with peanut butter, place one or two slices of dates and cover with another round. Press the edges together to enclose the butter and dates. Brush with egg diluted with a little milk or water and bake in a hot oven. If preferred cut the round larger and put the butter and date on one-half and fold over, pinching the edges together.

Mocha Frosting.

Take one-fourth cup of butter, one tablespoon of cocoa, two cups of confectioner's sugar and three to four tablespoons of strong coffee infusion. Cream the butter, add the

FOR A GOLD STAR MOTHER

By ANNE CAMPBELL

THE first point of the star is Memory.

The recollection of his baby ways. Upon the road to yesterday we see The shining candor of his infant gaze; The touch of velvet cheek, the clinging hands, The cunning accent making sweet demands.

Service to him, the next point of the star . . . The days and nights were busy in his care.

There is no rest where little babies are For mothers who are happiest to share The beating of their hearts with their small sons. They concentrate their lives on these dear ones.

Love is the third point of the star of gold.

In blest affection, all the stars converge. Only a mother knows how hearts can hold

So much of love; it is her life's chief urge.

Her love will follow him across the world, And past the gates where his lone flag is furled.

The fourth point of the star is sorrow . . . See!

The star is falling. . . . Shadowed is its light.

Only a mother's faith holds valiantly Against the coming of the final night. Now hurrying into space the gold star goes,

Its cargo all the heartbreak mother knows.

Only the fifth point keeps the star from wheeling

Forever lost in midnight's empty space; But still upon the sky a faint light stealing Shows it upheld within its lawful place. Serene upon the heavens see it ride, A gold star swinging by its fifth point—PRIDE!

Coffee Ice Cream.

Scald one and one-half cups of milk with one-third of a cupful of finely ground coffee, strain through a double cheese cloth, add one cup of sugar, the beaten yolks of four eggs, one-fourth teaspoon of salt; cook over water until thick, adding one-fourth cupful of sugar and one cupful of cream; cool, add three more cups of cream and freeze. HOW TO SHOOT

By Bob Nichols

Shooting Editor, Field and Stream

GOOD eyesight is a great aid in becoming a good wingshot. But on the other hand, poor eyesight need not necessarily hinder you to any marked extent in becoming a good shot. Some excellent shots I have known are men who wear spectacles. Since all of the information I give you has been gleaned from personal experience, not from hearsay, I take the liberty of becoming personal and telling you that from early boyhood I have worn spectacles. Although I cannot see well enough without my glasses to read ordinary newspaper type, yet on the skeet field I break just as good scores without my glasses as when wearing them. In fact, without the "specs" I do even a little better, striking an average.

Slightly incredible as this may seem, there is a trick in it, and I'll tell you what it is. Shooting skeet one knows exactly where his target is coming from. One also knows within three seconds just when it will flash into view. And you know exactly its line of flight. The fact is, one does not need particularly keen eyesight to shoot well. But to see all the game that gets in front of you in the field—this does require all the eyesight you can muster. Thus, with two gunners of equal shooting skill, the one with the keenest eyesight will in all probability get the most shots in the field and will, on that account, kill the most game.

Naturally, what I say here does not apply to skill in rifle shooting, because with the single-bullet gun and iron sights the man with the keener eyes is always the better shot.

Knowing that I shoot the shotgun a little better without spectacles, I frequently hunt in the field without wearing them. But on such occasions I like to hunt alone. I use my ears and do not want a distracting sound of a companion rustling through the brush. Many a rabbit and grouse I have killed where, but for my ears, I would never have seen them to get a shot. Alone, I always hunt very slowly, so that I can catch quickly any sound other than my own. But even so, I imagine many a rabbit gets up within easy shooting distance of me that I never see. The secondary reason why I do not like to wear spectacles afield is that they are a nuisance in rain or fog. But going without them is somewhat dangerous in this respect: you may be hit in the eye by switching brush with painful and even serious consequences. Without your "specs" on your eyes are slow in their protective reflexes.

The primary reason why I prefer to shoot without glasses is, as I have said, that I shoot better without them. For it is true in shotgun shooting, that if you see well enough to distinguish your target, you can see well enough to hit it with a load of shot. All shotgun shooting should be done with the eyes at what I used to refer to as "wide vision." Since then, one of my oculist friends has given me the correct term for this. He calls it keeping the eyesight at "universal focus." In other words, keep your eyes focused on no particular object. This is particularly applicable in skeet shooting. But it applies in the field, too. Keep your eyes wide open. See everything clearly in your field of vision. When the target or bird flashes out do not strain your eyesight in intense concentration of focus on it. Maintain your sight at universal focus. In this way you will be alertly aware of the target, aware of the line and speed of its flight, and also aware of your gun without concentrating too much of your attention on it.

Failure to keep the eyes at universal focus is largely responsible, in my opinion, for most shooters declaring that they cannot shoot with both eyes open. Certainly you can't shoot with both eyes open if you are trying to look intently at your gun barrel from breech to muzzle, and at the same time are trying to see the flying target! It just can't be done. Even the crack aerial rifle and pistol shots could not make their astounding records with this kind of alternating eye attention. I am convinced that all good shots on moving or flying targets, regardless of whether they shoot with shotgun, rifle, or pistol, use this universal eye focus in their shooting. If you can acquire this trick—and you certainly can—you just can't help becoming a much better shot.

Victoria Falls Statue in Honor of Livingstone

Near the mighty falls which he discovered in 1855, says the Detroit News, David Livingstone will finally be honored by a statue which is erected where the spray of Victoria Falls will fall upon it forever. He is pictured with a walking stick and Bible just as he disappeared into the African wilds and was found again by Stanley, whom he greeted calmly, as if they were meeting in a drawing room, with the historic "I am David Livingstone."

Mystery and superstition have hung over these African falls from time immemorial. Livingstone had much trouble persuading his African followers to accompany him.

Now the Cape to Cairo railroad crosses the river less than half a mile below the falls, and is rapidly dispelling the old fears, though some of them still linger among the natives.

Crocheted Rugs in Quilt Designs

By GRANDMOTHER CLARK

During the past years patchwork quilts have been the big article of interest to the home needleworker and now we have the crocheted rug in quilt designs. The beauty of these rugs can only be appreciated after you have seen one of them. Crocheted rugs have the best wearing properties.

The rug above illustrated is the "Flower Garden" rug, which you will recognize as having received its name from the "Flower Garden" quilt. Size of rug is 30 inches and made from 2 lbs. of rag strips. Each block is made separately and when the seven are finished they are slip stitched together. The colors to be used depends upon the material you may have on hand or can dye to colors desired. Use contrasting colors for the different rows and the brighter the colors the more sunshine the rug brings to the home.

Our book No. 24 on crocheted rag rugs in quilt designs contains 20 rugs shown in colors with instructions. Write our rug Dept. and send 15c for this book. Address Home Craft Co., Dept. C, 19th & St. Louis Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Why the Sudden Change to Liquid Laxatives?

Doctors have always recognized the value of the laxative whose dose can be measured, and whose action can be thus regulated to suit individual need.

The public, too, is fast returning to the use of liquid laxatives. People have learned that a properly prepared liquid laxative brings a more natural movement without any discomfort at the time, or after.

The dose of a liquid laxative can be varied to suit the needs of the individual. The action can thus be regulated. It forms no habit; you need not take a "double dose" a day or two later. Nor will a mild liquid laxative irritate the kidneys.

The wrong cathartic may often do more harm than good.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is a prescription, and is perfectly safe. Its laxative action is based on senna—a natural laxative. The bowels will not become dependent on this form of help. Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is obtainable at all druggists.

Do YOU Know—

That the first regular baseball game was played at Hoboken, N. J., June 19, 1846, between the Knickerbocker club of New York and the New York club (a picked team). Only four innings were played, as under the rules then existing, a game was won when either team made 21 aces (runs) or over on even innings.

She turned to wave her hand before she entered the path to the back door, opened it in response to a soft, cushiony:

"Come in!"

The kitchen was gay with blue and white checked gingham curtains at the plant-filled windows, a blue and white linoleum on the floor, blue pots and pans arranged on the shelves. Spotless town, if ever there was one.

"Glad you've come, Miss Prue. I cut that baklava for you. Wasn't that Rod Gerard with you? I wonder what's keeping him in this part of the country so late in the season."

"He is looking after his timber."

"Lors! I hope he and Calloway won't get into trouble again. Len's been jealous of Roddy since they were boys, when little Milly Gooch, the circus folks' kid, was always turning down Walt and Len for him. Len thought 'twas because Rod's folks were rich and a fine family, but what did the child care for that? She just about worshipped Roddy. Then there was bad feeling between the two before Len went west. He gets terrible ugly if he's crossed. I'm afraid he'll get the best of Rod, who's easy-going."

"Why not warn Mr. Gerard? He could escape before anything rough happens to him. It's good flying weather."

"Now, Miss Prue, don't you make fun of Rod."

"I'm not making fun of him; on the contrary, I am thinking of engaging him as my legal adviser."

"Then you've got another think coming to you."

Prudence wheeled. Her eyes widened as they met the dark, near-set eyes of Calloway, leaning against the door frame.

"Understand, Miss Schuyler, that if I cut your timber, I deal with you, with you and no one else. Gerard will keep out of my business or I'll know the reason why. He stepped between me and a girl once before—and it's for the last time."

Prudence regarded him under sweeping lashes. "Just why are you inflicting me with the story of your young life?"

Even the bald spot of Calloway's head went crimson. "You won't get anywhere wisecracking with me. You'll come round sooner or later to wanting me to handle your timber—they all do—and when I do it, I won't stand interference from anyone. Get that?"

Prudence never before had realized her capacity for fury. "I get it. Now get this. There will be no interference when you cut my timber, Mr. Calloway, for you won't cut it. I have already contracted with Mr. Gerard to do it."

"Gerard! Gerard get out lumber! That's a joke. Don't run away with the idea that because he can pilot a plane he'd stick to anything that was work. He dances and games his days away. He'd run at the first touch of winter. As for managing a crew, his poor flabby muscles would make a fine showing in a lumber camp. They—"

"They are rather out of condition," agreed an icy voice behind him, "but, flabby as they are, I don't take that wallop sitting down, they can chuck you out."

Rodney Gerard's face was white, his eyes were afire, as he caught the surprised Calloway round the waist and by sheer force of arms and knees rushed him outside.

He returned and banged the door shut. He leaned against it, dusted one hand against the other, and observed somewhat breathlessly:

"Saw his red car here and came back. Business seems to be opening with a whang, partner."

For the third time in ten minutes Prudence rearranged the egg-shell cups on the butterfly table, lifted the silver skittle-ball kettle to make sure that the wick of the spirit lamp on its brazier-like stand would flame at the touch of a match. She glanced at the banjo clock. Only five minutes since she had looked before? Unbelievable. Time was creeping on hands and knees. The knocker? She glanced at the clock. Not time for her brother. Who could it be?

She went slowly through the hall. She ought to be prancing with eagerness at the prospect of a caller. She wasn't. Since the family scandal she dreaded to meet new people. She opened the door.

She knew at once, from SI Puffer's description, that the tall woman facing her was Mrs. Walter Gerard. Large blue eyes, large floppy hat, large patterned gown, perfect accessories. The village women were right, she was a "nifty dresser." She extended a white-gloved hand.

"Good afternoon, Miss Schuyler. I am your neighbor, Mrs. Gerard, and this is my darling daughter Jean."

She drew forward a thin little girl in a soft pink frock who had been standing behind her. The child curtsied demurely. "She had pucky dark eyes, pale, unhealthy skin, short hair."

"Won't you come in?"

Try as she would, Prudence couldn't

THE STORY FROM THE BEGINNING

Prudence Schuyler comes from New York to Prosperity Farm, inherited from her uncle, to make a new life for herself and her brother, David, whose health has been broken by tragedy. The second day on her farm Prue falls from the barn loft into the arms of Rodney Gerard, rich young man, who lives at High Ledges on the neighboring farm. There is at once a mutual attraction between the two, but Prudence decides to maintain a cool attitude toward him. She suspects men since her sister's husband ran away with her brother's wife, Len Calloway, a rival of Gerard, tries to buy the timber off Prue's land, but she dislikes his conceited attitude and contracts with Rod to dispose of the trees.

hated the suave voice, hated the way the woman flicked her eyelids, hated her smile, hated the flutter with which she settled into the wing chair. The child sat primly on the ottoman beside her, her eyes darting about the room like a ferret's.

Mrs. Walter Gerard babbled: "So delighted to have a woman of my own kind near. Of course, our house is full during the season, but that isn't like having a neighbor. We hope that you will come often to High Ledges. What is it, dear?"

She inclined her head for the child's whisper. "The idea! No. No, of course not, Jean. She wants to prowl, Miss Schuyler, to see things. She is so intelligent. My cousin, the ambassador, says that she is the brightest child he has ever met. What an adorable skittle-ball kettle! Heirloom?"

Prudence wanted to snap, "No. Auction room." Mrs. Walter Gerard was so blatantly a person to whom family background would matter enormously in her estimate of a person, but she couldn't deny her father's great-grandmother.

"Yes," Lorgnon in action, Mrs. Gerard bent over the kettle. "It looks like a Paul Lamerie."

"But, my dear, don't you realize that it is a museum piece? That man's fame as a goldsmith has reached the ends of the earth. Fancy using it!" She settled back in her chair. "As I was saying, my brother-in-law is a bachelor; in consequence, I am never at a loss for young company."

Her wink fired Prudence with an unholy impulse to scratch her.

"But he's such a butterfly. He flits from flower to flower, never settles to one girl. A quite natural attitude for a rich man who has been pursued all his life, don't you think so, Miss Schuyler?"

She was intimating what SI Puffer had said, that Rodney Gerard was in terror of being married for his fortune. Did the woman think that she needed warning? A crash saved Prue's reputation for courtesy. Jean had been investigating the sugar bowl. The child scowled down upon it.

"Gee, it made me mad to drop that!"

Her mother folded complacent hands. "Darling daughter shouldn't touch things until she is better acquainted. She is interested in everything, Miss Schuyler."

"Uncle Rod calls me K. K., his Kurious Kid," Jean interrupted in a high voice. "He comes to see you every day, doesn't he?"

The elfish eyes interrogating her brought a wave of color to Prue's face, the rush as of many waters in her ears. Mrs. Gerard anticipated her answer.

"How amusing that you should have imagined that, darling. Your Uncle Rodney is an indolent, good-natured boy; perhaps he might allow himself to be monopolized—for a time. You have a brother, dear Miss Schuyler?"

"If she calls me dear once more I'll throw something at her," Prudence told herself furiously. Aloud she informed smoothly:

"Yes. I expect him at any moment." She deliberately looked at the clock. Never in her life had she been so rude, but never before had she had such occasion, she excused herself.

"Coming today! Happy girl! I'll run away, you must be busy. You will come to High Ledges when we return in the spring, won't you? We close the house soon, so I am afraid—"

"Uncle Rod isn't going," Jean announced.

"Rodney not going!" Mrs. Gerard's suave voice shrilled. Her face reddened unbecomingly. Her blue eyes hardened; then she laughed and winked.

"This darling has the strangest fancies, Miss Schuyler. You won't forget me, will you?" She extended her white-gloved hand, showed her long teeth in a large smile, and started along the herring-bone brick path with a springiness bordering on juvenility. Her daughter lingered to whisper hoarsely:

"I know why Uncle Rodney isn't going back to the city. He's goofy about you." She stuck her tongue in her cheek and ran.

Prue's eyes smoldered as she watched mother and daughter enter the luxurious maroon touring car.

"Horrid woman," she thought passionately. "I wager that you are a scold, a hypocrite. I feel as if my heart and soul had stumbled into a nettle patch. They are all prickles."

She crossed to the window and tried to concentrate her attention on the road by which her brother would come, but thoughts of her recent callers would intrude.

It seemed ages before Gerard's shining black roadster swept into sight. She darted between the brick gateposts as it stopped.

"David! Dave, you dear!" Her voice choked. Had her brother grown gaunter since she had left him? She sprang to the running board and laid her glowing cheek against his white one. He held her close for a moment. His eyes, so like hers, were warm and tender, his voice was humorously unsteady, as he admitted:

"Prue, I wouldn't have believed that I could have missed being coddled as I did. You've spoiled me. May I get out? This is a veritable armchair of a car, but I smell a wood fire and toast. I'm ravenous for that toast, aren't you, Gerard?"

Prudence blinked valiantly. "David, I'm as temperamental as ever. I forgot everything when I saw you. Mr. Gerard, remember that you promised to have tea with us."

"Thank you. I'm all for it. Better grab my arm, Schuyler. One is apt to be stiff after a long train ride."

Prudence put her arm under her brother's while Gerard steadied him on the other side. They led him to the wing chair in front of the fireplace. He sank into it and closed his eyes. Her breath caught in a strangled sob. He looked up and smiled.

Prudence dropped to her knees beside him. "David, it is wonderful to have you here. You—you put the heart into the house. We'll have the happiest time, and you will gain in weight and health every minute with the milk and eggs and chickens fresh from the garden. I'm some farmer already, am I not, Mr. Gerard? Why, when did he go?"

"I suspect that he slipped out when you and I forgot there was anyone else in the room, Prue."

"I'll bring him back, pronto." She straightened the foot-cushion, dropped a kiss on the top of his head, picked up the silver kettle. No sign of Gerard in the dining room. She opened the kitchen door. He was perched on the corner of the pine table, his hands clasped about one knee as he talked to Jane Mack. Wonder of wonders! Macky was smiling!

"Tea is served in the club car!" Prudence announced in a stentorian tone, as she reached for the teakettle on the range from which to fill the silver one in her hand. Gerard seized it.

"Let me buttle. I'll feel like an outlander at this family reunion unless I can help."

In the living room Prudence seated herself on a low stool beside her brother's chair. She answered his questions to the accompaniment of the purr of steam from the kettle, the crackle of the fire, the tinkle of silver on china. She concluded:

"The evening I arrived I racked my brain for a name for these acres we have inherited which would make our coming seem like a new deal. I seized a word which has been hiding in the dark recently, pulled it out into the light, and named the place Prosperity farm. Get the psychology? I christened the car Success—so that it never will fail to get me to my destination—but I can't decide what to call the poultry. They've just got to lay eggs for me and I must resort to autosuggestion."

"What's the matter with Nickels?" "Grand! Picture me scattering corn, calling, 'Nickels! Nickels! A little action this morning! Eggs, Nickels, eggs!'"

After tea Gerard carried the tray to the kitchen. Prudence could hear the faint rumble of his voice as he talked to Jane Mack.

"The impossible has happened! Macky's granite heart has been chipped at last, David," she confided.

"Gerard certainly has an engaging manner. What do you know about him?"

"Nothing, except that even in the late era of frozen assets the bulk of his fortune remained fluid. Mrs. SI is my authority. That woman is a regular Who's Who for this village. The fact that he is rich tells me all I want to know."

"All rich men are not alike, Prue. You and I have been unfortunate in some we have known."

"David, do you think that I will ever forget the result of Julie's marriage to a playboy? She was the sweetest big sister a girl ever had, and she died of a broken heart. Forgive me, Dave, forgive me," she pleaded, as his head dropped back against the chair and his eyes closed.

She caught his hands tight in hers. "Why, why did I bring that up! We'll forget it. It's behind us. You've had a long, tiresome day, David, why not go to your room, then I'll tuck you into bed, and tomorrow you'll be rested and refreshed and I will show you everything."

"That program sounds good to me." He laid his hand on her shoulder and rose. He was tall and pathetically thin, but he held his head, with its thick, dark hair, with royal dignity.

"Everything's going to be all right now, Prue. Already I feel stronger. I will go up as you suggest. Say good afternoon to—here he is now," David Schuyler added, as Gerard entered. "I have been ordered to bed by my tyrant, so I'll say 'thank you' for bringing me from the train, and obey." He offered his hand with cordial friendliness.

"Let me give you my arm. Those steep stairs look tricky. If she will promise to be good we'll let your sister trail along."

From the hall Prudence watched the two men as they slowly mounted the stairs. Tears blinded her. David looked so frail, so weary, as if too strong a wind might blow him away. She shut her teeth hard in her lips. It was her job to see that a strong wind didn't touch him. One didn't stop to question when the most precious person in one's life was in danger; one did things. She wasn't much good if she couldn't stand between him and trouble.

Someone knocking! Another caller? Why had the neighbors started to be friendly today of all ways when she wanted to devote herself to her brother?

By Sheer Force of Arms and Knees Rushed Him Outside.

er? She opened the door. Her breath caught in a little gasp as she confronted Len Calloway.

"Good afternoon, Miss Schuyler. May I come in?" He entered the living room without waiting for an answer.

Prudence resented his assurance. "I can't talk business now, Mr. Calloway. My brother has just arrived and I want to be with him."

"I won't detain you but a moment. I came to ask once more if you will give the contract for cutting your timber to me."

"I have already told you that I have arranged with Mr. Gerard to do it."

History of House Cats

Dates Back to the Ark

The long, colorful history of the house cat had its dawning in the Ark—that is, if one is to take the word of Damir, the great Arabian naturalist who wrote of animals in the Eighth century of the Hegira, according to a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

"When Noah entered the Ark his family represented to him that the mice would devour all their possessions; whereupon the patriarch addressed a prayer on the subject to Allah, who in response caused the lion to sneeze a full-grown cat from its nostrils—the result being that the mice were not only kept in order during the Deluge, but were impressed with that timidity that has made them lurk in holes ever since."

Notwithstanding the learned Arabian's ingenious account, more recent scientific investigation indicates that the Egyptians were the first to domesticate the cat—a species of the African wild cat.

The life of the cats in the Valley of the Nile would seem to have been a bed of catnip, figuratively if not literally. They enjoyed high privileges in being held sacred to Isis and to Pasht. In fact, cat-headed deities were not uncommon in the Egyptian Pantheon.

Mistreatment of the cat was a base crime in those days. Diodorus related that a Roman soldier who had killed a cat barely escaped with his life from the hands of the infuriated people.

Stamps Show Public Parks

Post Office Department Is Picturing the Beauties to Be Found in the National Playgrounds.

Washington.—Scenes from two more of the nation's playgrounds found places on United States postage stamps in September when the Post Office department released the four and eight-cent issues of its national park series. On September 18, the eight-cent Zion park (Utah) stamp joined its fellows already released for their twofold purpose of carrying mail and proclaiming the beauties of America's out-of-doors. The gray-green stamp had in its center a reproduction of "The Great White Throne"—towering templelike rock formation found in the park.

A week later, a four-cent sticker of autumn brown color, representing Mesa Verde National park of Colorado, took its place in the upper right-hand corner of part of the nation's mail. On its face stands, in a central design, the camera's story of "Cliff Palace," an awesome ruin of the now vanished cliff dwellers.

Yellowstone Best Known National Park

"If your knowledge of geography is good," says a bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographical society, "you probably will know, in which states eight of the ten parks are located; but only if your knowledge is much better than average will you be able correctly to place them all."

"Yellowstone has been familiar to Americans since it became the country's first national park in 1872. Yet every year thousands of visitors turn homeward from its gates unaware that its area includes parts of Montana and Idaho as well as Wyoming."

"Inquiries as to the situations of the Grand canyon (Arizona), Mount Rainier (Washington) and Yosemite (California) can be answered by most persons with even a casual knowledge of the geography of America; but neither the embryo 427,000-acre Great Smoky Mountains National park of Tennessee and North Carolina, nor Glacier National park in Montana are so well known."

"Between the longitudes of Acadia National park along the rocky coast of Maine, and Crater Lake National park in southwestern Oregon, lie not only the parks that have been selected for the stamp series, but ten others, twenty in all within the continental borders of the United States. Two more, the Hawaii National park and Mount McKinley National park of Alaska, complete the list."

"Postage stamp geography was not born with the issue of this series. The Colosseum of Rome is depicted on an Italian stamp; a picture of the Arc de Triomphe is the central feature of a French issue; and several nations have placed miniature maps on the faces of their stamps."

"In 1900, Nicaragua pictured her famous volcanic peak, Mount Momotombo, on a postage stamp. Some commentators on the history of engineering efforts to construct a canal between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, assert that the Momotombo stamp, calling attention to the presence of volcanoes in Nicaragua, turned the scales in favor of the Panama route."

Out of the Fountain of Youth

SLEEPLESSNESS OFTEN DUE TO HUNGER

TIRED . . . worn out . . . too nervous to sleep . . . That is frequently the story behind dull eyes, lagging steps, the inability to "get going."

Quite often sleeplessness is due to the fact that persons are hungry and do not realize it. Even though one may believe that he is getting sufficient food, he is actually starving some part of the body. The hunger is not realized because it is not immediately evident. It is a hidden hunger that manifests itself in a general run-down condition of the body, a feeling of lethargy, an attack of "nerves."

The importance of vitamins and minerals in the diet cannot be over-emphasized. Foods containing the vitamins—fruits, vegetables, fresh milk, eggs, cheese, butter, and grains should form an important part of each day's menus in order to keep the body functioning normally.

A good plan to try at night when sleep refuses to come is to drink a glass of milk—cold, warm, or hot—although warm milk is especially good.
Eight hours of restful sleep and a diet containing adequate vitamins and minerals will do much toward giving one a feeling of youthful zest that will keep one refreshed and "on the toes" at all times.
